What Cleveland and Representative Clevelanders Are Doing Each Week—

IS told and interpreted every Saturday in "Cleveland Topics," a vigorous, colorful and fearless journal dedicated to the up-building of Cleveland community.

Timely editorials and special articles, distinguished by earnestness and sparkle and human interest, establish "Topics" as one of the outstanding magazines of its class in the country.

News and announcements of social affairs and personal activities of Cleveland's leading men and women; club and organization plans and programs; splendid reviews of the New York theatres, and books, discussions of art and music, sporting events; comment on the markets and financial matters—all of the subjects of widest interest to thinking persons are presented comprehensively and intelligently in "Topics."

A subscription to "Topics" represents a tonic for eyes wearied with reading empty words. Every Clevelander owes himself this weekly rejuvenator.

Foreword

IN a spirit of community helpfulness this volume has been conceived and prepared after more than a year of painstaking effort. In the undertaking—the first of the kind in Cleveland—the aim has been to produce a standard biographical reference source, but aside from such usefulness, the sketches are intended to serve as a mirror of current progress because the records of individual citizens go to make the substantial growth of the city. Printed proofs of all data having been submitted for approval and the vital statistics having been sanctioned by those whose names are included, this work is in reality an autobiographical compendium, covering a large portion of Cleveland's representative population.

Up to this time Cleveland has been one of the few vast centers in which such a book has not been available. Access to information about men and women in everyday business, civic or personal affairs has been difficult, therefore, to obtain. In the early days of Cleveland's existence, down through the nineteenth century, everyone was well acquainted with one another. When curious folks came via the Ohio Canal to see or to trade, they had plenty of leisure to find out what they did not know about the city or the people with whom they dealt. Since Alfred Kelley built the city's first railroad on to the time of development of super-arteries of transportation by rail, water and air, there still continued that degree of congeniality in which all met as neighbors.

Since the beginning of the present century, in which Cleveland moved up as a city, the trend has been toward limitation of intimate personal acquaintance. The lackadaisical era in which people called one another by their first names and in which handshakers were omnipresent, is followed by a new period. Now a city of a million persons and the natural hub of at least two million people in one of the most prosperous sections of the United States rather demands authentic records about persons and affairs.

In selecting names, every possible effort has been exerted to procure information from all who were deemed eligible, but some names, which were desired, are missing for reasons of personal modesty or misunderstanding of the real object of this enterprise. In every case written requests were sent by mail and in many instances personal solicitation was made in order that the purpose might be fully understood. Some who have not been included may be surprised. Others who are included may wonder why certain names were selected along with theirs. But we wish to impress forcibly that in the selection of a representative list many conditions had to be considered; prominence in daily prints or prestige in form of authority or wealth had to be considered in relation to the idea of the volume, and the real purpose of it. All names have been chosen impartially and for no consideration other than desirability. The book is limited to living subjects and to legitimate information about persons, but in case of death of anyone whose questionnaire had been returned and in the hands of the publishers, the same has been included as prepared and marked (Deceased).

Anyone who wishes to know about a representative citizen of Cleveland, as to where he came from, how educated, regarding his home life, politics, military or possibly religious affiliations, or something of the various steps in accomplishing a career, may turn to this alphabetical list for the desired answer. Or for those who wish to know more about certain friends or acquaintances, the volume is intended to be enlightening.

The press of Cleveland, daily, weekly and metropolitan, will find "Representative Clevelanders" especially helpful on many points of importance and interest. Errors easily occurring in hasty writing or hurried preparation may be obviated to a degree by use of the compiled data which is in a standardized type form and style. Restrictions to accomplish uniformity may be misunderstood in some instances but the practicability of the form adopted will be apparent in usage. Libraries in Cleveland as well as in many other cities early signified their desire to have the book on their shelves.

As this volume makes its appearance Cleveland stands on the threshold of a new advance in industry and transportation.

When it is considered that ten million passengers or nearly one-tenth of the total population of the country are carried every year by steam railways, interurbans and busses in and out of the city, and that sixteen million tons of freight are hauled in by rail carriers annually, part of which is consumed and the remainder of which is manufactured into millions of tons of cargoes for outgoing shipments, one can realize more fully the urgent need of enlarged fact and figure references. Publications generally now concern themselves not so much about abstract affairs as about persons, who they are, what they are doing, where they came from and how they succeeded.

Increasing importance of Cleveland as a financial center also emphasizes the increased necessity of accurate vital statistical records for use of banks and business houses. Since the Federal Reserve system was inaugurated in 1914, resources of the member banks in the fourth district, of which Cleveland is the center, have more than tripled, now totaling close to four billion dollars. But more important than banking figures or transportation or manufacturing prestige is the growth of Cleveland's civic spirit before which the provincialism of olden days has been forced to bow, and to which this work is dedicated.

To those who responded courteously to this enterprise and with an understanding such as moved them to act for mutual community advantage, we express our feeling of gratitude.

No doubt, as time goes on there will be necessity of revision and in order to assure of this we will later invite suggestions for improvement or advice as to changes in biographical data, changes of address or of business associations, and especially notices of deaths.

R. Y. McCRAY,
Editor.
